A THRILL OF HORROR.

Capital is everywhere the same. Its glorious rule works out along identical lines in all countries. It is the great conservator of individual liberty, as anyone can see with half an eye.

Then again, the wage market of capitalism so nicely adjusts the reward for services rendered in the vineyard of capitalist property as to preclude the possibility of many of the workmen weakly plunging into the wasteful expense entailed by married life and the rearing of families.

the act of officials that have followed each other in rapid succession since the close of the outrage upon the W. V. F. of M. office, and which have culminated in the decision of the Supreme Court to postpone the hearing of the habeas corpus cases until a sufficient time has elapsed to enable the active conspirators to complete their murderous work, ought to be sufficient to prove to the most stupid that the law is an institution intended to preserve and safe-guard only the rights of the particular class in human society who may for the time being be in control of its machinery, while at the same time it becomes the means of striking down and over-riding such rights or privileges, as an opposing class, or objectionable individuals of such class, may fancy they possess.

The capitalist class of the United States to-day hold the supreme power in the world, and the working class while written laws and constitutions may profess to assure to workmen and citizens in general, certain rights and privileges, the fact still remains that when it comes to a showdown none have either rights or privileges except that comparative handful of people who own the corporate wealth of the land, and whose tools and henchmen fill every government post from dog-catcher to president.

Whether there are any good grounds for the startling story called to the Tribune or not time alone can reveal. In the meantime the ignorant and misguided working men who do not know a little that they don't want to work more than eight hours a day are induced in numbers in every country to join in a strike when they do not know if there are any good grounds for the startling story called to the Tribune or not time alone can reveal.
