WASHINGTON.

Tacoma, Wash., Oct. 22, 1936.—Socialist sentiment is manifesting itself in many ways in this state. Our meetings are large and enthusiastic, the people who attend are very sympathetic, and we are organizing as never before.

The executive committee issued three letters today and one application for membership was granted.

The correspondence is increasing with the state and there are numerous inquiries as to how to organize local branches.

The unwarranted arrest of speakers is afflicting the workers as never before. It is a most vexing prospect that there will be a most vigorous protest at the polls. This in itself is not desirable, but one of the effects will be to arrest the attention of the voters.

The state executive committee is preparing to keep Earl Herman in the field continuously. This committee expects to prosecute more vigorous campaigns after the election than it has done during the campaign just closing. The reason for this is found in the fact that the month of election is more important for months; they seem to see the folly of dividing our energies. With a united party and a solid front, we have more power in the eyes of the country.

From election day forward, Organization will be our slogan. The work of the state office is to keep the local branches active and to keep them from drifting into inactivity and help letters will be sent to all sympathizers whose names and addresses can be obtained. All the Socialist papers show a commendable desire to aid in this work.

The comrades in Seattle have proposed to the National Headquarters a plan by which they hope to keep a number of speakers in the field. In this effort the state office will co-operate.

WAGE SYSTEM, TRADES UNIONS AND SOCIALISM.

To contend that a raise in wages by the branch is an injustice is gained at the absolute expense of the balance of the workers is probably incorrect, since commodities always sell at "all the traffic will bear" in any event.

But granting that an isolated raise in wages means a lessening of profits, the fact still remains that one set of men can only secure better terms of wage-servitude because the other men keep off the job.

The trades union does not fix the price arbitrarily at which its members will sell labor-power. On the contrary, it does the same as any other trust; it limits as best it can the available number of men selling specific brands of labor power, and to the extent that this can be accomplished is the success or failure of a trades union determined.

The universal law of supply and demand cannot be set aside, but where a combination can be so formed that it has the power to limit production, the price can be more correctly fixed. This is true even though, even then prices will fluctuate in conformity to existing conditions.

The trades union is composed of poor material to make a trust out of; its members have stomachs which demand food, hence it is well-nigh impossible to withdraw the sale of its commodity for any length of time.

And a union is no stronger than its ungrateful link.

It has been argued by many workers who should know better that all the workers to unite in one industrial union, wages could be raised till there would be no profits left; hence the workers would be receiving the full product of their own labor.

Unfortunately the employing class already own the various commodity trusts, backed by the power of the state, and to limit the production of any commodity by shutting down their mills and turning the wage slaves loose.

And what power on top of the earth can prevent the price of lumber going up under such circumstances?

So that if the workers could enforce a $10-a-day wage schedule they would still be receiving no better pay.

As a matter of fact there is no solution of the labor problem within the limits of the wage-system—upon which capitalists are bent on persisting.

Then what should the workers waste so much time in endeavoring to build up organizations—dual and otherwise—so limited in scope and power, and so utterly incapable of coping with the situation confronting labor?

Why not turn to and devote more of our time and attention to the overthrow of class rule; the abolition of the present accursed system of production for profit, and robbery of labor; and to the category of commodities—bought and sold like so much junk?

Such is the aim and object of the Socialist party, the world over.

To accomplish such a task necessitates an international effort on the part of the proletariat, separate and distinct from all parties standing for the present ownership of property.

The workers of the world must organize politically, where possible for the express purpose of seizing the powers of state.

This done, the social revolution will have dawned; and it will be up to those elected to do so to devise ways and means for the next step.

As a matter of fact, not only will then be adopted must, of course, be more or less speculative. To lay plans for the rising generation would be rather a logical and an utopian.

Judging from history, experience and precedents, the course to be adopted by the victorious workers will be such as will conform to their own requirements.

The first legislative document will in all probability be a bill transforming that portion of property functioning as a means of production into the collective property of those who do the work—thus making it possible to produce the necessities of life for use; and give to each the full social product of their labor.

Just this part of the socialist program must be left to those who will be doing the job at the time.

Meanwhile the workers of this and all other capitalist-dominated portions of the world are still selling their labor-power day by day to a market that is ordered to kick out a living for themselves and raise some more slaves to take their places as cogs in the wheel of modern industry.

All kinds and sorts of plans and instinctive efforts are being made by various sections of the workers, to get away from something the market for their labor has no knowledge of.

Just now in Britain Columbia still an "independent" labor party, being a party can be no better than the thing it represents; and a man can be no better than the party or principle he represents.

The present independent "lar of mixed pickles" is supposedly to represent the trades union movement in British Columbia.

The movement is founded within the limit of the wage system and can do nothing beyond that; if it did so, and acted accordingly it would cease to be a trades union.

The political expression of such Organizations cannot go beyond dealing with the traffic within the framework of capitalism.

The emancipation and industrial freedom of the workers lies outside the wage-system and capitalism.

The political expression of such a revolutionary program is the Socialist party.

The issue is plain.

The workers themselves must make the decision.

To choose the former only means prolonging the agony of wage-slavery with all its attendant evils.

The latter choice must ultimately mean the liberation of the working class.

Why not make it now?

R. P. PETTIPiece.

"OUT OF EVIL."

"The revolt against Chicago canned meat is a remarkable instance of how out of evil sometimes cometh good. Poor people in the East End of London are being better fed now than they ever were."

"Grocers who were unable to get rid of their stores of canned meat sent them to the East End to be sold at a reduced price. The majority of the poor people there seldom if ever read the newspapers, or if they knew anything about the scare they have shown that they do not trouble about it for they have been able to buy the canned meat at about one-fourth its original price."

"Not a single case of illness has resulted, says this police missionary. In fact the only matter of concern is the appearance of these East End poor is surely a testimonial to the wholesomeness of the food they are enjoying. The only matter of concern is as to whether those people will be able to get more food at such cheap prices when the present stock is exhausted."

"The above from a London press dispatch affords a splendid illustration of how good may come from evil under the glorious dispensation of modern business. Note that we were put up in Chicago under such conditions of fifth as to turn the stomachs of our smug bourgeois citizens, and the good Lord knows that anything that would turn their stomachs might be mighty rotten, it sloughed off upon the London poor who had heard nothing of the Chicago revelations. Their ignorance, however, probably cut but little ice in the matter as their necessities would impel them to swallow anything that came along in the nutritive line no matter how filthy. The fact is, it is doubtless due to the fact that some centuries of training in the art of living upon the attenuated end of nothing, and the beneficent reign of English capitalism, has developed in the "London poor" the digestive and assimilative powers usually attributed to the goat. This would naturally render them immune against Chicago canned meats unless they should accidentally choke to death upon the can itself."

"To fancy London's "East End poor" going about rotund of belly and wearing a beaming smile as a result of the horrible exposure of Packington fifth is pleasing indeed to the grocer who unloads their rotten goods on the "East End poor" at a reduced price suffered no financial loss by the transaction."

According to the Stockton (Cal.) Evening Record, Charles Schubert was recently brought to the Stockton State Hospital for the insane on the charge of reading "An Appeal to Reason."

The sad fate of Schubert should be taken as a warning to readers of the "Record" not to attempt to get away from its brand of dope too suddenly.

The struggle between the capitalist class and the working class in its analysis resolves itself into a struggle for control of the powers of the state. Whoever side it is in control of these powers is in a position to enforce its mastery over the resources of the earth and the products of labor. There is nothing else worth fighting about.

Sentimental outbursts about such figure in shaping the morals and ethics of business as it does in determining the conduct of a vampire sucking the life-blood of its victim.
