

The number of employees killed in coupling and uncoupling cars and engines upon the railroads of the United States for the quarter year ending March 31, 1906, was 84. This is one less than was killed in the previous quarter. The property loss was the same in either case, as fortunately none of the cars or engines were injured.

---